GEO. HULL CALLS FARMERS TO RALLY FOR NEW DEAL

ness could not be done without it. He does not believe in Pittsburgh plus; therefore, he does not ask a price for wheat equal to Liverpool plus. He does not believe in ship subsidy; therefore, he does not ask for farm subsidy. He does not believe in guaranteed railroad earnings; therefore, he does not ask for fixed prices for farm produce, although he is as much entitled to them. He does believe in the law of supply and demand as a natural and economic law which not manipulated by gambling interests.

"He is not fond of a high protective tariff as now in force, because it has cost him $450,000,000 per year more than it brought him. He was in sympathy with the farm bloc, because it became necessary to use the weapons of the enemy to defeat the enemy. Congressional blocs have been in use for years. If we must fight for our legislation through the bloc system, all well and good. He is not in favor of excessive credit. Excessive credit means inflation of currency. The farmer wishes no more of his wartime experience with inflation of currency. Had all men, children and industries been drafted into service on an equal basis without currency inflation, war bonds retained at par, we might have been capable of moving on as before. Too Much Greed.

"There seems to be a misunderstanding between industries. There is too much selfishness, prejudice, greed and hatred. Everyone is willing the other fellow's business should be readjusted. It appears to the agricultural class that the readjustment was commenced at the wrong end. Farming is a basic industry old as time itself. Representing 80 billions of dollars, without American agriculture, where would America be today? Without thoroughly organized agriculture on a business basis, where will the business of farming be tomorrow. It is only partly and loosely organized. Where will all other industries terminate, if this basic industry is not stabilized on a business basis?

Who is going to do it? There is absolutely no hope through politics. They are too rotten to bear the weight of a soap bubble. We still have hope through legislation to pave the way, but the farmer must do his job. We believe in a stable market for our produce will help solve the problem. We believe cooperative marketing will help stabilize prices for farm produce. It is being carried on in many counties. We have our agricultural colleges and universities that are at last awakening to the fact that stress must be laid upon cooperative marketing. They are our servants. Our purchasing power is less than it has been for over 60 years. The gap between producer and consumer is wider than ever before. What is being done to close it? The price of our produce is high enough, then come down with the price of your manufactured articles so we can do business with you. If you cannot reduce the price, hold your manufactured article until we can establish a marketing system through which we can demand a price that will enable us to buy your product. If you continue producing, as the farmer does, with no market for your surplus, what will you do next? We are at that stage of the game. Perhaps the solution of your problem will help solve ours. May we work together for the benefit of all?"

Have to be Shown. The producer and consumer must get together. The essential middleman, rendering a service, cannot be eliminated. The fellow, extracting unearned profit from both producer and consumer, must be dismissed. It will take generations to perfect this system. We farmers accept slowly. Our minds work slowly. We have to be shown. We have been shown and promised too many times in the wrong direction. We have accepted too many promises during election time. We have at last learned that we must depend on ourselves. Wherein we are unable and incapable, we must buy the best talent available to work out detail and we must be willing to pay for it. We must have most of the machinery necessary to complete the job.

"We have made a start through farm organizations, which means to the farmer what the association of commerce means to the city man. We have our agricultural colleges and universities that are at last awakening to the fact that stress must be laid upon cooperative marketing. They are our servants. Our purchasing power is less than it has been for over 60 years. HARDING OUT ON THE OCEAN FOR LONG TRIP

President is to begin his tour of inland Alaska railroad and highway that will bring him out again at Cordova, is expected to occupy three days.

Seward is on Resurrection Bay, so named by the Russians because they discovered it on an Easter Sunday, and Cordova, outlet for Alaska's wealth of copper, is on Prince William Sound, 200 miles east of Seward, enroute to the Gulf of Alaska.

Seward is the terminus of the old Alaska Northern railroad, which was purchased by order of former President Woodrow Wilson as the first move in the construction of the government's Alaska railroad.

At the Capital City. President Harding was met at Juneau Tuesday by Scott Bone, governor of Alaska and the president and his party spent the entire day here. It was raining as usual since Juneau is one of the wettest spots anywhere.

The president spoke to the audience gathered to greet him. "There must be a lot of Baptists in Juneau, as any rate people who so generously turn out like this on a rainy day ought to have some measures of return," he said.

"We were greatly impressed by the scenery of Alaska during this first part of our trip. Sturdy, majestic, stalwart and immovable are truly the only words which describe this wonderland of ours. I am proud of you as citizens of the United States. It is good to know of Alaska, and it is our purpose to know you better and have you know our government better."

The president then referred to the children who played a prominent part in the greeting extended him and said:

"Although children can not choose where they are born, yet if they could choose, I think they would select the west."

He was greeted with great applause when he declared that he knew the government would help those who are now children more than it has helped their parents."

Miss Grace Murphy, professional, as always, the perfect accompanist. "Mrs. Munn gave," "A Bill of Divorcement" one of the 10 best plays of the year selected recently by Burns Mantle, New York dramatic critic.

The vehicle was well selected, bringing out the ease with which the reader reveals highly dramatic situations. Mrs. Munn is no longer in the line of amateurs. Studying under the most proficient masters of dramatic art, Mrs. Munn is now equipped to bring out her latent talent as a reader and orator. For an encore she gave an Irish number, "When Katie Got Struck on the Stage." Mrs. Munn gave two other readings, "The Treasure House of Missions," in French dialect and "Her Day at Home." Revising Our Hymns.

The attention of the international convention of the Christian Endeavor societies has been called to the hymns we use and an effort made to have them revised. It will not succeed. The hymns as they are, old tunes and old words, have been too long fixed in the public mind. There is something about the old hymns that we cannot get away from any more than we can the memory of the crooning lullaby with which we were wont to go to sleep as little children. We neither forget the singer nor do we forget the song. The test of a song and the test of a hymn, is the response we get in the human soul.

A Boston speaker assails many of these old hymns we have been raised upon. He did not like "Beulah Land" because it has a line "I've reached the land of corn and wine," objecting to the word wine. "Onward Christian Soldier" is too military. Others, too, were "inane" and "meaningless." All of which is not new. Other persons from time to time, not all from Boston with its meticulousness about literary exactness and truthfulness, have objected to our hymns. An army may go into battle singing, as they did in the Spanish American war, "Mr. Johnson Turn Me Loose" or in the Civil War with "We'll Hang Jeff Davis on a Sour Apple Tree," and pedantic Boston would criticize these swinging marching tunes and the words, we have no doubt.

It is hard to say just what makes a hymn live in the minds of people. "Shall We Gather at the River" and "Abide With Me," and that old jazz tune, "I'm Glad Salvation's Free" are widely different yet no boy or girl who went to church or class meeting or a song service night, ever will forget those hymns along with a score of others of the same general tenor. Rhythm must be there. The tune must be one that is not filled with sharps and flats and all sorts of elaboration in the notes so that the untrained singer will find it hard to express himself. The true hymn is strong on faith. "I believe," is the keynote. Positive knowledge of God and salvation is expressed in the popular hymn. And no hymn will be a good hymn unless it is devoid of high-sounding ambiguities and ponderous words. Simplicity is the keynote with a deep longing and backed by faith. Most of the hymns that live are of this description and no matter how displeasing to some of the Bostonians they may be, we shall probably go on singing them as long as there are men and women who remember, and others grow up to take their places with hope and belief and longing filling their souls.

Mr. Gary says he will put less than 12 hours in operation when "practicable." Probably that will be when German paper marks are at par.

Taking Mr. Ford Seriously.

That Henry Ford will not receive the nomination of either the democratic or the republican party as a candidate for the presidency seems certain. Then he will have only a third party to fall back upon. What will that be? To start a Ford party would necessitate an amount of machinery which he would hesitate to finance. One of the reasons for the small vote for Roosevelt when he ran for the presidency on the Bull Moose ticket was the lack of funds at the very start for organization, or agreeing upon and placing a set of electors in the field from each state and getting the machinery going for campaigns. "Popular uprisings" have to be organized and more votes are cast when they are well organized than when not. Those closest to Henry are aware that he himself would probably not contribute a nickel to the campaign for president. He is not that kind of a candidate. He also prefers to hold onto those millions which he has in the bank. A part of his present popularity comes from those political parasites who are always found on the trail of a dough bag. They are going to be bitterly disappointed in Henry.

There also is another bar to Henry. The only party with any show at all in the field, and in a close contest, is the farmer-labor group, now happily divided. And Henry stands no show whatever of a nomination from that source. One wing of that party is so radical that nothing short of a genuine anarchist can hope to be named. The other has its one god in La Follette and some one near his kidney will have the support of the delegates to that original group if it has life enough to function after the greater part of its force has been captured by Foster and his Russian soviet.

Also Mr. La Follette, prefers, both in Wisconsin and in national affairs to act as a republican. He can hope for no advantage in the senate as leader of any other party. What he may do in Minnesota is of no consequence to him. He has a member of the republican national committee from Wisconsin at his command, and will be heard from in the republican national convention.

It looks as though Mr. Ford is entirely outside the breastworks wherever he has attempted to break through. Those democrats who think that Mr. Ford can be nominated in a party convention should remember that 350 delegates can defeat any nomination and that there will be that many who are a part of the machine of the democratic party and fully alive to all the necessary tricks that bring about what is wanted. And Warren G. Harding will be nominated by the re-

ENGLISH TO TAX BETTING

By FREDERIC J. HASKIN

Washington.—Americans who have been getting tired of hearing about new taxes every little while, especially during the war, will be interested to hear of an impost about to be laid on our British cousins which probably never will be levied on this side of the water. It is a tax on betting. We have had taxes on sodas, on candy, on fishing rods, on fancy vests and lampshades. Income and excess profits, but Americans so far have escaped a federal tax on betting and probably will continue to do so.

Betting, especially on the horse races, occupies a different position in England than it does here. In nearly all states of the American union betting on the horses is illegal and even where it is permitted it is rather under a cloud and frowned upon by many organizations in the country. A great difference between the public attitude in the two countries is that over here bets have no standing in law. No suit can be filed which is connected with gambling. In England, however, suits arising from betting are frequent in the law courts. They are heard and decided on their merits in accordance with the British code. This situation makes the proposed betting tax not so surprising a matter in England as it would be here. Such a tax would not be unpopular in England. It would fall under the classification of a luxury tax, as betting is not a necessary activity of life. It is a species of sport and the theory is that anyone who has money enough to afford to engage in sport, can afford to pay a tax to the government.

Sir Horace Hamilton, chairman of the board of customs and excise of Great Britain—a position of no little importance—has submitted to a select committee the proposal to levy a tax on betting and the committee is expected to bring in a report embodying a scheme which, in all probability, will be put into effect.

The plan which is being discussed tentatively provides that bookmakers shall be licensed by the government. Each bookmaker shall pay a license fee of $50 a year. Then the government would levy a flat percentage tax on each bet placed with these bookmakers. If a rate of five per cent is decided upon, a man making a bet of $100 on a horse would have $5 of this sum deducted and paid to the government. The bookmaker, presumably, would be under bond, and would make returns to some central office, all taxes deducted from the bets he accepted, just as in this country the motion picture theatre collects the tax and makes returns to the government.

Horse races and football are the sports on which the Englishman places most of his bets. Football occupies in England the same position that baseball does here. It is the great professional game. There are more fans in England than there are in this country. While many people through American baseball parks in the summer, they do not approximate the numbers that turn out for the great professional football matches in England. Whereas a crowd of 40,000 to 50,000 people is a big one at an American baseball game, British football attracts crowds ranging from 80,000 to 125,000 at a single game. Cricket draws nearly as well. With such interest as this, it is easy to see that a tremendous tax would be collected from a levy on the bets of the fans. Indeed, the commissioners of the excise are estimating that the betting tax will produce a revenue of $200,000 a year. Hitherto, this has been a wholly unexplored source of revenue.

Betting is much better organized in England than it is here. Bookmakers in this country are very much under the ban of the law and have to do their work in a clandestine manner. In England a bookmaker maintains an office openly because his business is not illegal. In fact, the business is so well recognized that bookmakers even extend credit. If a man wants to bet $100 on a horse and lacks the cash, the bookmaker will accept this bet on credit. The spectacle of an American bookmaker doing any thing like this sort of preposterous. The new scheme proposes that these bookmakers having offices pay a rate double that imposed on the bookmakers at the tracks, or $100 a year for licenses.

Actuaries have estimated that the British people place bets aggregating half a billion dollars a year. This is about $10 for every inhabitant, many times what the American people place in bets.

Some doubt has been expressed as to whether the tax would discourage betting and prevent large collections of revenue. Experts believe that the tax would make no difference because the people usually do not bet to obtain a return, but more than they bet for sport. The very nature of betting is such that a man would not refrain because a tax would be deducted.

To bet at all, a man must be prepared to lose his whole bet. Therefore, he would not refrain from betting because he had to pay a tax.

It is not a new idea for governments to obtain revenue from betting, but the idea of a direct national tax on bookmakers and individual bets is new. Some American states operate the pari-mutuel scheme of betting under which the state government receives a certain return. The government of the principality of Monaco is entirely supported by the proceeds of betting, the people paying no taxes for the maintenance of the government. The casino of Monte Carlo at Monaco has for years been the Mecca of the world's gamblers. They have a saying there that black wins sometimes, red wins sometimes, but white always wins. This refers to the colors of the roulette wheel on which the bets are made and involves a clever pun. For many years the manager of the casino has been a man named Blanc which is the French word for white. Blanc, the manager, always wins.

The republic of Cuba, and other Latin-American states maintain government lotteries as a source of revenue. These are constantly in progress. The government will appropriate a lottery prize of $100,000. It then will sell to the public 100,000 lottery tickets for $1.50 apiece. A man will pay $1.50 for a ticket which, if it is the winning ticket, will bring him a fortune of $100,000. The government pays the $100,000 prize to the winner. It has collected $150,000 from the sale of tickets. No one loses very much and the government makes $50,000. This is a frequent operation and always popular. It is a lottery of any kind are against the law in the United States.

publican convention in 1924 if he is then alive. It matters little to Mr. Ford whether he would be nominated by democrat or republican. The changes are he has no conception of what either stands for any more than he knew whether Benedict Arnold was a grocer's clerk in Washington, the author of a card game or a captain of a steamboat. Mr. Ford has two things—ignorance and money. Neither will make a president.

We are never standing still in Wisconsin. Progress is the watchword. Last year we killed only 63 people with automobiles but the outlook this year is that we shall more than treble the number.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST.

THEIR WAY.
We've had our troubles at times, but then Always we've chuckled and kissed again; Never remembering the wrong we'd done said When our tempers rose and our cheeks were red; Never lived over the hateful days And kept them alive, for it never pays; And we've always started each day just right And we've always said at the close, "good night."

We don't profess we're a saintly style. When things go wrong it is hard to smile. And losses come as the days go by. And nerves will tingle and tempers fly. So I've growled my growls and mu's growled hers And she's flung her barbs and I've used my spurs. But never a wrong we've had, I'll say, Has been kept alive for another day.

We've said our say, and we've banged the doors And stomped our feet on the hard-wood floors. And muttered things in the heat of rage. Which wouldn't look well on the printed page. Sometimes all day long we've growled about And ma's looked glum as she walked about. But when night came down and we went to bed We've always kissed as "good night" we said.

Now love will not die with a spat of two. If you'll start afresh when the quarrel's through. But hatred grows when you keep in mind And brood and brood on the things unkind. For love grows weary and will not stay Where they wake with the rancor of yesterday. So leave your by-gones along the way And keep no old quarrel to start the day.

Who's Who Today.

MISS THERESA BONNEY.

Miss Theresa Bonney, or rather Miss. Theresa Bonney, as she is known in Paris, is a brilliant young American scholar, the tenth one of her country to pass the Sorbonne examination and only the fourth woman to do it.

Already she has translated or adopted several French plays for production in New York, and her critical opinion has been recognized in France since that day, a little more than a year and a half ago, when her defense of a thesis on the French government, "Les Idees Morales dans le Theatre d'Alexandre Dumas Piere," brought to the Salle Louis Lard not only the usual audience of amateurs of such academic oracles, but also many Parisian journalists and representatives of the theatrical world at large, curious to learn what an American girl could add to French existing opinion on the subject.

That examination was the last chapter of a brilliant academic career begun at the University of California and continued at Harvard and Columbia until a commission to assist the French government in the choice of their most promising students to fill scholarships in American colleges brought her to Paris. Her work at the Sorbonne was done while holder of a fellowship founded by Mr. Baudrillard of the French academy.

It was during her undergraduate work at California that Miss Bonney began to specialize in French. After taking her A. B. there she went to Harvard for her study of romance languages.

Personal Health Service

By WILLIAM BRADY, M. D.

Noted Physician and Author.

SPRAYING THE WARES ON DISPLAY

I take great pleasure in introducing today, dear children, the "Lady from Detroit," a new and splendid she is a Detroit or more specifically a Detroitess. She has a message, which I wish we could broadcast for the good of everybody's health. I have a pet aversion. It is the person who sits next you at the table or leans over food in bakeries and cafes, and splashes as he talks. There are in Detroit a chain of bakeries in each of which there is a cake and so forth lies all about and buyers stand and talk over the food. In some cafes the glass covers are mere shams, as they are open in just the right place to catch the droppers, which must pour down upon the food.

"My other pet grievances is the way people are allowed to say at movies, coughing, upon the back of one's neck at the evening. I sincerely hope the day will come when people who have to cough will not be permitted to stay in such crowded places. There is in four-fifths of the cases no attempt to smother a sneeze or a cough in a handkerchief.

"I remember how disgusted I was to find people expectorating in their handkerchiefs in Germany, but I see the wisdom of it now and hope to see the day when the masses will understand they cannot go where they wish and expectorate in their handkerchiefs. So would I, but our chances of surviving that long are not very good, what with everybody's sneezes and coughs and the danger to the health of his neighbor.

A Rochester, or whatever they call folks who hail from Rochester, N. Y., who, like all adulterous, traveling salesman, desires to second the Detroiters' motion:

"A month ago, in Elmira, N. Y., I resolved one of these 'sprays' you mention and since then have been sick and, though now better, in the Springfield, Mass. Y. M. C. A. reading room, over the mantle, hangs a large printed sign: 'If you spit on the floor, we want you to feel at home here. We want you to feel at home here. It is a cure and an education.

"If there were a sign in all hotel lobbies, elevators, auditoriums and public places, saying: 'If you cough and sneeze microbes on your children at home, cough and sneeze them here.' It would not be a more potent preventive of this pernicious practice than the sign in the hotel lobby.

"It might help to bring conscientious scruples to persons of enough intelligence to understand, but most of the crowd face sneezers and coughers are impervious to polite suggestion. They have to be kicked.

Saw a public demonstration at the movies last night. Sat near the back row. Over our heads and behind us were a number of fans keeping the air circulating very well indeed. Fans naturally moved the air so that the crowd was comfortable. Every old fusser, several of whom were in trousers and a few of them had all their hair on, including a little on the upper lip, in the choice and worked in three or four especially sad looking ones began to force coughs, probably with the intention of reminding

A Free Booklet For Campers

Camping may afford one a most enjoyable and restful vacation or it may mean a trip to the hospital and annoyances. It all depends upon knowing how to camp. This booklet, for free distribution, contains an automobile road booklet which includes much valuable data on the subject of camping. It covers subjects thoroughly—camping equipment, camping clothes, pitching a tent, food, and a number of other subjects. It also contains an auto trail map of the United States, together with descriptions of the various insular views.

To receive a copy of this, just fill your name and address on the coupon below. Enclose two cents in stamps for return postage.

Rapid Turnover of Stock Urged by Frisco Speaker

By FRISCO SPEAKER

Rapid turnover of stock by sales is the salvation of the retail business in the opinion of W. W. Cooley, San Francisco advertising man, who spoke before the Janesville Rotary club at luncheon at the Grand hotel at noon Tuesday.

"Stop your junk in expenses by conducting your business on a percentage basis and accelerate your turnover," he said. "Turnovers, not profits, should be your slogan. If you have a good accounting system, these faults will be uncovered. Keep a going inventory and you may readily see what part of your machine needs speeding up."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Fatty Tumor.

Nineteen lumps under the skin, which several physicians tell me are fatty tumors, is there any treatment to remove them without having them removed? (Mrs. M. R.)

Answer.—Fatty tumors are harmless and require removal only when they are unsightly or give annoyance. For so many, unless they are removed, they will not be removed. As a rule small fatty tumors are painlessly removed under local anesthesia and without incision from your regular play.

What Does Your Mother Imagine?—I used to drink water with meals, but the other night we had cucumbers and mother would not let me have any more cucumbers. I was very queer tonight. Mine always seemed to dry up and blow away if I didn't eat cucumbers. What was your mother's reaction, reader?

Tom's Test for Bread.—As a test for bread I give you one that is not always infallible. Dry out in the oven a fairly thick slice of the bread, brown it if you like, but dry it well. If it is good, it will be soft and spongy. If it is poor, it will be hard and dry.

Bread, But If it swells up like sponge when you put it in hot water, it is to me good bread. Good bread will remain good, wholesome and nutritious, and will keep for a long time. The refined flour now commonly used seldom stands this test, but the bread made from whole wheat flour, or the refined flour from the Italian bakers usually does. Better still—I think—is the rye bread, which is made in the way and with the addition of some milk, sugar and apple or other sauce, makes a dish fit for a king, satisfying without being nourishing—and it seems to me—gives one pep and endurance in his work. (Tom.)

Answer.—They are wholesome, readily digested, and give a good deal of value, even less than oysters, about the same as lemons or squash.

HOROSCOPE

THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1923

Venus dominates this day in benefic aspect, according to astrology, while Mars is, helpful. Neptune is adverse.

Mercury would exert all their energies while this configuration prevails, for to them is promised success.

This is a rule most stimulating to constructive work and work to achieve great things in developing institutions that benefit the public.

Organizations of women are to attain new importance within the year. It is prophesied and they will be recognized as of foremost aid in some national enterprise.

During this rule of the stars physicians and surgeons will be hailed as heroes, and their work will be recognized as of foremost aid in some national enterprise.

Again honors and promotions for soldiers are foreshadowed and it would seem that military activities are presaged for a time not far beyond the new year.

Astrologers designate this as a rarely auspicious wedding day since the bride and bridegroom who wed hereafter in this aspect of the stars may expect lasting love and increasing wealth.

There is a sign read as unusually promising all places of amusement, although there may be a decline of profits in certain quarters.

Neptune is in a place today that seems to indicate even more scandals than in the past and there will be also libel suits, for the press will contain much sensational news.

Oil speculation comes under an unlucky direction of the stars that makes for losses and severe reverses. The conjunction of Mars and Neptune, which will take place next month, will seriously disturb France, Italy and Russia.

An important man will end his career in Russia and his demise will produce results not altogether conforming to the predictions of the famous correspondents who have so frequently diagnosed the political diseases of the country.
